Various persons in official positions, whom etiquette prevented from signing the memorial — for instance Lord Lytton ("Owen Meredith"), then British Ambassador in Paris, — conveyed privately to Ernest Vizetelly their hope that it might prove successful, but the only response of the Home Secretary was that he could not advise her Majesty to interfere in the case. Thus Vizetelly completed his "time" at Holloway, being released at the end of August, 1889. He returned to his home at Putney, and afterwards removed with his daughter and his son Arthur to Heatherlands, near Tilford, Surrey, where he spent, in suffering, the few years that were left him. They happily sufficed for him to see in England a considerable revulsion of feeling with respect to Emile Zola — of whom he had prophesied, in his letter to Sir A. K. Stephenson, that time would bring round its re-
